

Car Crash Conundrum

A green car overtakes a black one, misjudges the maneuver and the two vehicles collide. Police attend the scene. The drivers and their front seat passengers have minor injuries, but a woman is clearly dead in the back of the black vehicle.

The police officers are quite content to accept that the driver and passenger of the black vehicle were not involved in the woman's death and that those in the green vehicle did not cause or contribute to her demise.

Why were the officers so easy to convince?
